From the Agronomy Desk...

Summer has come and gone, and the kids are back in school or just about to head back to school. Our crops have grown extremely well with all the moisture and heat we have had since June. This means harvest is just around the corner. We have seen a lot of hay being made, which has just added to the inventory this year. With the amount of hay, we have taken off this year we should really think about adding some potassium to help restore the nutrients in the root to better over winter.

Soybeans look much better than last year, but we have found some white mold in very select areas.

If you need soil sampling this fall, please call to get on the list. If we have not sampled soil in a while it would be a good time to get it done so you can use the information to plan for crops for next year.
